No, I think that Harry Potter should be the character for statue. Created by J. K. Rowling, he was the main character in her most popular books, such as: "Harry Potter and the Chamber of Secrets", "Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire" and others. There are millions of Harry Potter's fans all around the Earth, a lot of movies and a bunch of games about him. The books are great for both adults and children, because it's very good written and thought through. Harry always tried to help anybody who needed it, no matter what. Shy, smart and kind - that is how you describe Harry. Everyone loved him for that.

The statue ~~should~~ might be presenting a young boy, with thick hair and skinny face. He should have a magic wand in his hand and ~~may~~ wear a cape. Also he can hold onto his broom.

Harry Potter is one of the most popular and loved characters in the world, almost everybody know him. 125
